When implementing their coding skills in computer based projects, children will naturally fail or make mistakes from time to time. Consequently, this can teach them how this experience is not always negative in nature, and that they can always learn something valuable from failure. Computing also aids children to improve their problem-solving skills. As you may probably be aware, good problem-solving skills are associated with making better decisions, and as a result, children who learn how to implement these skills are more likely to become well-rounded and successful adults later on in life.	Reception, 1 & 2	Mr Groom	£30
